THE ABOLITION OF GRAMMAR.

The State of Texas, one of the younger children of the union, has broken out in a fit of pique against her stepmother, the United States. She is a free state. She is one of the 36, and they are the 36. She has, therefore, taken it into her head to demand a divorce or separation from the union. The United States, it seems, has not been so agreeable as she would like. She has had to put up with a lot of petty annoyances, and she feels that she is not getting her full share of attention. She feels that she is being treated as a stepchild, and she wants to be treated as a child of the family.

The United States, on the other hand, is a bit put out by the whole affair. She has been trying to keep the peace, and she feels that she is being put in a difficult position. She wants to keep the union together, and she feels that she is being forced to take action that she does not want to take.

The situation is a bit tense, and it is not clear what the outcome will be. The United States may decide to give in and grant Texas what she wants, or she may decide to hold firm and try to keep the union together.

It is a bit of a dilemma, and it will be interesting to see how it all plays out. In the meantime, the two sides are locked in a bit of a tug-of-war, and it looks like it will be a while before anything is resolved.
