4 One of the defects of the English language is the absence of a bisexual pronoun. We frequently in writing find it necessary for clearness to repeat “he and she”, “his and her”, and “him and her”. This is almost always awkward. I suggest the following forms: —
Nominative ha (he and she or he or she); possessive hez (his and her or his or her); objective hem (him and her or him or her).